Introduction

This subject analyses both issues relating to international taxation and those referring to customs duties. There can be little doubt over the close ties the two subjects hold with the growing importance acquired by international trade and, in general, with the increase in international relationships between companies and individuals.

The first module deals with general issues relating to international taxation and analyses the concept of International tax law. This is followed by an inspection of one of the key themes of the subject: the notion of residence for tax purposes. Closely related to this issue is the phenomenon of international double taxation. The module concludes with the study of a very important instrument in the sphere of international taxation: conventions to prevent double taxation.

Having analysed the general aspects of international taxation, the second module goes on to examine the tax imposed on income obtained by individuals and organisations not residing on Spanish territory. Thus in relation to income tax on non-residents, the analysis focuses on the income obtained in Spain and the exemptions included in the regulations, the figures of the taxable person, the guarantor, the representative and the withhold, and incomes obtained both with and without a permanent establishment. Finally, there is a study of the optional system for EU residents and the special tax on the property of non-resident organisations.

The third module examines a series of very important issues for what is known as international tax planning. After an analysis of this concept, the module continues by looking at transfer pricing and rules set in place to prevent tax evasion. It also deals with treaty shopping – a matter of growing importance in the current trade situation – and its consequences for taxation. The module ends with an examination of yet another very important aspect of present-day international taxation: tax havens and the rules for preventing tax evasion.

The final module examines customs duties, a subject on which there is a high level of harmonisation in the European Union. It analyses the nature and types of duties, the taxable event for customs duties, situations not subject to duties and exemptions, taxable persons and the effect of taxes, the quantification of customs debt and, finally, customs management.

Objectives

The main objectives for students to strive for when studying this subject are as follows:

- 1. To identify the criteria for determining residence for tax purposes and the domicile for tax purposes.
- 2. To recognise the personal elements involved in the taxation of non-residents.
- 3. To understand the taxation of non-residents operating with a fixed establishment.
- 4. To understand the taxation of non-residents when they do not operate with a fixed establishment.
- 5. To gain a clear picture of the optional taxation system for the residents of other Member States of the European Union.
- 6. To get to grips with the problems of international double taxation and the mechanisms for avoiding it.
- 7. To understand the tax system for related-party transactions.
- 8. To learn about the fiscal consequences of tax havens.
- 9. To distinguish the main features of the special tax on the real estate of non-resident organisations.
- 10. To find out about the structure, content and essential elements of customs duties.
